

CENTER FOR HEALTH EQUITY

Presents

UCLA School of Public Health Alumnus

Dr. Lori Carter-Edwards,

Deputy Director of Research and Operations at the UNC Center for Health Promotion and Disease Prevention

Dr. Carter-Edwards will discuss

Body Image and Obesity in Black Populations: Individual and Social Implications

February 16, 2012

12 – 1pm

In the Dean's Conference Room (16-059 CHS)

Dr. Carter-Edwards received her MPH from UCLA School of Public Health and PhD from UNC-Chapel Hill. In her current research, Dr. Carter-Edwards collaborates actively with the Department of Public Health's Office of Minority Health and Health Disparities (OMHHD) and the Physical Activity and Nutrition Branch's Eat Smart Move More (ESMM) initiative. Previously, she developed and led a national Clinical Translational Science Award (CTSA) program linking expert consultants in community engaged research with academic health institutions, at Duke University. She remains active with the CTSA Outcomes of Community Engagement Committee.